

WHAT IS CLAIMED IS:

- 1        1. A retaining wall having at least a first row and a second 2        upper row resting on top of the first row, each of said rows comprising 3        one or more blocks, each of said blocks comprising:
4              a block body having:
5                  a front wall, a back wall, a first side wall, and a second side 6                  wall forming a void within an interior area of the block, said walls having 7                  an upper surface and a lower surface;
8                  a plurality of lugs located on the lower surface of the block 9                  adjacent to the void;
10                 a lug indentation located on the upper surface of the block 11                 adjacent to the void, said lug indentation sized to accommodate at least 12                 one lug from an upper block of the second row, 13                 an extension located on a bottom portion of the back wall of 14                 the block; and 15                 a slot located on an upper portion of the back wall of the 16                 block, the slot providing a support for the extension of an upper block 17                 from the upper row of the retaining wall to rest; 18                 whereby a lug from the upper block is inserted into the lug 19                 indentation of the lower block, the extension of the upper block resting on 20                 the slot of the lower block.